

He used to keep dogs as pets, but he never had to worry about any of these!
However, toward this woman... to his surprise he actually cared about her feelings.
Regan's eyes were full of disbelief; even himself could not believe that this was real!
There was a look of surprise in Hazel's eyes as well. She did not see this coming!

Could it be that he was in a good mood now, so he said this to her out of the blue?

Looking at Hazel's stunned expression, Regan thought that this woman was... probably feeling happy.
Somehow, he was quite proud of himself.

However, Hazel was thinking about what Max said two months ago. "Maybe you can suggest your wish of working outside when Mr. Morris is in a good mood. That might probably work."

And now, Regan was in such a great mood that he was willing to give her a reward by bringing her out tonight if he got some free time! Could this be the great chance for Hazel to voice out her idea?

So Hazel said cautiously, "If you want to... give me a reward, can you... let me go to work during the day? Just like how it was in the past arrangement, I... I swear I will definitely come back before six o'clock in the evening." Hazel was so nervous that her heart almost jumped out of her chest.

She was so afraid that she dared not look at Regan because she was really worried that he would become angry.

Certainly, the look on his face changed in just a second. There was even a subtle change in the look of his eyes!

D*mn it! This idiot... He had been coaxing her by telling her that he would bring her out tonight if he had got some time, but she did not appreciate it! She was even negotiating with him!

Was she really that eager to go out during the day?

Unfortunately, day time was not the time he would commonly show up!

He could not wait to see this woman 24 hours a day, but this woman still wanted to leave for work during the day!

When he just met her, he would not care about what she normally did in her everyday life. She could do whatever she wanted during the day, as long as she stayed by his side at night and satisfied his need to hug her while falling asleep.

But now, he just couldn't!

The rules had changed!

"Why?!" Regan's voice had become cold. His anger was like a flame wrapped by ice shards, more threatening than his usual anger.

Hazel did not even realize that her words could be so excruciatingly wounding.

Instead, she felt that it was a chance for her to voice out her opinion. "I just feel that... staying at home all day could be... very boring, I've nothing to do. Going out could let me feel more occupied, and I can gain more experience in life..." She tried to persuade him with the benefits of working, "Working outside can also brighten up my mood! It can make me feel much happier and healthier!"

Regan voiced out his concern, "Aren't you happy to stay here, Hazel?!"

Was she happy only when she went out during the day?

So even if he offered to take her out at night while he was free, this woman would not be happy, wouldn't she?

Because she wanted to go out during the day!

She did not want to be trapped by him here!

She didn't even want to be kept here and well protected by him!

Hearing Regan's irritated and cold voice, she realized he had gotten real mad.

"No... I'm... happy..." Hazel said cautiously. She started to regret that she had even voiced out this idea in the first place.

When Regan saw that she had become so worried and cautious again, for some reason, his heart softened. The anger within his heart was slowly suppressed, and it slowly dissipated.

"Remember, whether it is the time that you go out, or the time you start working, it is all for me to decide."

Although Hazel was disappointed, she nodded and said faintly, "Okay..."

Late at night, Hazel once fell asleep out of exhaustion. She did not even have the strength to open her eyes, sleeping soundly.

What she did not know was that Regan, who always hugged her and slept more comfortably than he ever could in the past decades, was the one who did not fall asleep tonight.

Instead, Regan's eyes were fixed on the woman's sleeping face.

After sometime, he silently looked away and sighed...

Recently, he had broken the rules three times for the sake of this woman.

The first time was at the wedding ceremony. Not caring whether it was daylight, or even in the middle of a wedding ceremony, he just wanted to rescue her when she needed it most.

What happened next...

When Max received a short message from Regan, "I won't be there tomorrow morning."

He who was about to sleep—after busying the entire day—immediately had a change of expression

How could Mr. Morris be like that!

Last time was already an exception!

Max became so impatient that he couldn't care less about the usual rules. He straight away gave Regan a call, but what he received was a cue tone indicating that... the phone was turned off!

Max thought to himself, "This is bad!"

Although Mr. Morris would behave capriciously and overbearingly from time to time... there was no reason he could take this so casually.

After Regan had informed Max, he did not expect to get Max's reply. Instead, he threw his phone away once it was turned off.

The cell phone had radiation, and it was bad for health!

In the end, he held Hazel's soft body in his arms like he usually did and fell asleep soon after.

The next morning.

Hazel opened her eyes as usual, and her sight was blurred.

She wanted to stretch her body. After all, she had slept for a whole night and her body was stiff. However, she found that something was wrong!

Because her body couldn't move and was tightly held by a strong embrace; she couldn't go anywhere.

Hazel, who was still in a daze, woke up in an instant in shock.

At this time, she was startled to see that she was not the only one laying on her bed, and it was different from what it used to be.

Hazel was stunned, and her heart tightened!

Regan didn't leave? He was still asleep while having his arms wrapped around her!

At once, Hazel looked at the alarm clock on the nightstand, but it was already seven in the morning!

What the hell was going on?

Amazed and surprised, Hazel stared at Regan, who was still asleep. It was real, not an illusion she saw. Compared to the cold and arrogant face she usually saw, the man who was sleeping next to her was looking so peaceful and gentle, just as handsome as an angel. His beauty was so mesmerizing.

Just as Hazel was still immersed in shock and kept staring at Regan, he opened his eyes in the next second.

Just at this moment, Hazel was stunned!

Because she saw something...

She saw that Regan's eyes were... blue!

Unlike the light blue color that she had seen by chance before, it was a kind of... deep, blue eyes, like the ocean!

Even though it was only the first sight, it was enough to make her heart tremble and left her mesmerized for a long time.

On television, Hazel had seen those blue eyes of foreigners before, but she didn't think it was unusual!

However, Regan's blue eyes were different. They were obviously so beautiful and seductive.

Hazel suspected that at this time, she was looking at... an immortal creature.

Her heart beat faster.

Regan's eyes were so cold that it was full of vigilance and killing intent. He immediately covered Hazel's eyes with his palm.

"Don't look!"

Once again, Hazel was so shocked that she reacted to the confusion. She was so scared that she dared not move again.
