Elizabeth and Janet overheard the conversation from outside the door, and their anger dissipated instantly.

Janet playfully patted Elizabeth's shoulder and teased, "Frank is so affectionate. Why don't you go in and hug him? What if someone else snatches him away?"

Just as Janet finished speaking, the three individuals exited the restaurant.

The female classmate greeted Elizabeth and Janet politely before hastily bidding farewell.

Elizabeth remained lost in Frank's words, unable to snap out of it.

Worried about Janet getting wet in the rain, Brandon reached out and pulled her into his arms.

"Elizabeth, you..." Frank began, but Elizabeth suddenly hugged him tightly before he could finish his sentence.

Frank paused, his heart melting, and then he embraced Elizabeth tightly in return.

"I'm not going to study abroad. I'm staying here with you. We won't be separated." Elizabeth, overwhelmed with emotion, broke down in tears in his arms.

her enough to abandon everything and follow her without hesitation.

At that moment, she realized that her future and freedom paled in comparison to being with him.

All she wanted was to be with him forever.

Watching them embrace in the rain, Janet let out a sigh of relief, a happy smile spreading across her face.

Feeling accomplished, Brandon leaned in to kiss her cheek, asking with a hint of playfulness, "How was that? Did I do well? Do I get a reward?"

Janet blushed, covering her cheeks and scolding, "What are you doing? We're in public. What does it look like?"

Despite her words, she couldn't help but laugh. Standing on tiptoes, she whispered in his ear, "But you did do well. I'll give you some extra pocket money when we get back."

Frank, absorbed in his thoughts, seemed oblivious to the couple's playful exchange. He was still concerned about Elizabeth's future.

"No. Since you've made your decision, stick with it. Don't worry, I have a plan."

Elizabeth looked up at Frank and whispered, "But..."

"There are no 'buts.' If you study abroad, you'll have a bright future. If you stay, you'll live an ordinary life. You know which is more important."

Frank hugged her tighter, adding, "I'm glad you have a plan. I don't want you to have any regrets, so stick to your decision."

Tears welled up in Elizabeth's eyes. "And what about you?"

Frank lifted her face, his expression serious. "Don't worry, I'll go with you. I can study business, and doctors earn well abroad. Besides, I can learn to cook. When you return from school, you can have hometown dishes every day, and on weekends, we can travel to nearby cities. We can go wherever you want."

Each word melted Elizabeth's heart, turning into tears that flowed uncontrollably. She was deeply moved.

"But don't you blame me? Don't you blame me for not including you in my plans?"

Frank held her close, his voice full of tenderness. "It doesn't matter. If I'm not in your plans, I'll follow you and leave my footprints on the path you take."
