

The Man's Decree Novel Read Online Chapter 1235

Chapter 1235 Residing In Your Body

"I must have revenge..." Jared said faintly after having calmed down.

"Revenge?" Mr. Sanders asked.

With a light wave, Mr. Sanders threw the defenseless man off before continuing, "Listen. The martial arts world has its rules, and I decide how things are run in Jadeborough's martial arts world. If you want to break the rules and disobey me, you'll need to show me you've got what it takes to do that. If you can't, you should keep your mouth shut and do as I say. I want you to leave Jadeborough right now. You'd better run as far as possible because if I ever see you making a mess here again, I'll send you to hell."

Although Mr. Sanders spoke in a mild voice, his words sounded shockingly hostile to Jared.

Jared kept quiet and glanced at the dying Skylar, his hand subtly trembling as he held on to the Dragonslayer Sword.

He wished he could just finish off that man with his weapon, yet he knew that with Mr. Sanders in their presence, there was not even the slightest chance of him attacking Skylar.

Skylar is already paralyzed. Even if he makes it out alive, he'll live in pain for the rest of his life. This pain might be the best revenge I can exact.

With that thought, Jared kept his sword and glimpsed at Howard silently before he leaped into the darkness.

"Get lost, all of you," Mr. Sanders said to Lachlan and the rest.

The man shuddered in fear at the order and quickly got his family to leave.

"Why did you save Skylar, Mr. Sanders? Why did you ask Mr. Chance to leave Jadeborough?" Theodore asked as he approached the official.

"It's not him whom I'm saving but Jared," Mr. Sanders answered, eyeing the man on his last legs. "Jared will die if he stays in Jadeborough."

Theodore was astonished. Does Mr. Sanders know something? Maybe I shouldn't ask. I'm not in a position to ask anyway.

After Mr. Sanders left, the remaining Nortons quickly came and carried Skylar into a room for treatment.

To their dismay, Skylar was so severely injured that he would have to remain wheelchair-bound for his whole life, even if they could still save his life.

As a young man and the only heir of a martial arts family, being handicapped was no better than being dead.

Since the servants did not know what to do with Skylar, they could only wait for David's orders once he returned.

Back in the room, Skylar was left all alone to fight the pain that had driven him close to unconsciousness several times.

Although he could not move a muscle, his eyes still blazed with anger as he recalled what Jared had done to him.

"Jared Chance! I swear I'm not human if I don't kill you!" Skylar seethed in difficulty.

"Do you want to kill Jared?" a croaky voice sounded from a distance all of a sudden.

"Who is it?"

Skylar whipped his head toward the voice, only to see a figure slowly appearing out of thin air in the room.

The injured man opened his eyes wider to get a clearer view of the man, but the person still seemed blurry to him no matter how he tried.

It was as if it had no bodily form but was only a shadow.

But how can a shadow speak?

"You don't have to know who I am. I can heal your body and even help you kill Jared," the voice continued.

"What do you want from me?"

Although Skylar was fatally injured, he was still clear-headed enough to know that there was no free lunch in the world.

Since help was offered, it could only mean that he was expected to return the favor.

"Turns out I made the right choice coming to you. You're a smart one," the shadow noted before pausing and smiling. "I want your body."

“My body?”

Skylar was stunned. What he just heard made no sense to him.

“I’m just a spiritual sense now, so I need to reside in someone’s body. In this case, your body is what I need,” the shadow explained.

The Man’s Decree Novel Read Online Chapter 1236

Chapter 1236 Westward

Skylar instantly understood what was happening. This spiritual sense must be terrifyingly powerful to have a consciousness of its own.

“I’ll do anything to kill that man...” Skylar promised, hatred glistening in his eyes.

He was willing to do anything to vanquish his enemy.

“Ha! Don’t you worry about that,” the shadow assured with a scoff.

Suddenly, a ray of white light flashed across the room, and Skylar felt something enter his mind.

Then, the same hoarse and old voice echoed in his mind. “You’re pretty strong. You’ll be able to kill Jared under my guidance, but I’ll have to heal you first.”

Soon enough, a white mist evaporated from Skylar’s body and engulfed him.

An hour later, the white mist was wholly gone, carrying away all the wounds on Skylar’s body.

It was as if his body did not suffer any injury to begin with.

Skylar was thrilled to see that he had recovered completely, but when he got up to check his body, he stumbled and almost fell the moment he got on his feet.

The man looked down at his leg, only to realize it was crooked, and that caused him to limp.

“Your tendon’s gone, so this is the best I can do. I’m afraid you can’t walk like normal again,” the voice said.

“Does that mean I’ll limp for the rest of my life?” Skylar snapped, frowning.

“Yes. This is already the best you can get,” the voice said from within his head.

Skylar gritted his teeth in fury and gripped his fists. “Jared Chance... I will make your life a living hell!”

Meanwhile, Jared left for Medicine God Sect after Mr. Sanders had ordered that he leave Jadeborough. Since Mr. Sanders had spoken, there was no way Jared could stay, so he decided to go to Medicine God Sect to settle some critical matters and visit Rayleigh and Lizbeth.

Village of Villains was undergoing reconstruction and required a lot of medicine and pills from the Medicine God Sect, so Jared went to discuss the details with Axton.

After dropping by the Medicine God Sect, Jared went to Village of Villains. When he arrived, the Villainous Four was still healing in the Pentacarna Tower, so Jared just talked to Leviathan for a bit and informed him that he would be away for some time.

Although Leviathan did not know the reason for Jared’s sudden departure, he did not probe into the matter.

After leaving the village, Jared went to the Southwest Region. Harnessing his spiritual energy, he could still travel fast, although he went on foot instead of taking a car or flight.

Since Jared did not bring Pentacarna Tower with him then, he could only cultivate using the spiritual energy of the universe or any places enriched with spiritual energy.

He did not bring the tower with him because The Villainous Four needed it for their recovery. Moreover, Jared figured he should use that as an opportunity to train on his own since he had indeed improved his cultivation speed after employing Pentacarna Tower and Thousands of Miles Away.

Yet, despite his improvement, he still felt his ability was not polished enough. He knew he could not simply rely on magical items if he wanted to break through the Nascent Soul phase.

An opportunity was what he needed for a breakthrough, so Jared decided to hone his skills until he eventually came across a suitable opportunity.

He enjoyed nature along his way to Horington, where he rested for a day and visited his parents, William, Walter, and Tommy, before continuing his journey to the Southwest Region.

Soon enough, he arrived at a place called Wildefield, which was close to the border of the Southwest Region.

The scenic place was rich with dense and lush jungles, mountain streams, and rivers.

By that time, the weather in the North was already uncomfortably frigid, yet Wildefield was warm and cozy. So instead of going to the bustling city, Jared chose to continue his journey with the jungle route.

I might be able to come across something interesting in the thick woods. Perhaps I might even run into some sect here.

Sprinkles of sunshine seeped through the leaves and branches, falling on him as he chartered through the jungle.

The Man's Decree Novel Read Online Chapter 1237

Chapter 1237 Crimson Palace

After venturing ahead for some distance, the surrounding suddenly darkened significantly when the sunlight was blocked off by a patch of towering and lush trees.

"Why are the trees here especially tall? It's the same piece of land," Jared mumbled in curiosity.

The soil is the same, so the condition of the trees shouldn't change so drastically all of a sudden.

Realizing this, Jared released a spiritual sense to survey the aura of the surrounding.

Soon, he realized that there was a vast stone somewhere in front. It had a height of more than ten meters, and there was a two-meter-high cave in the middle of that stone.

"What is this thing? Don't tell me the stone is emptied out."

Jared frowned and hastened his steps toward the rock.

When he reached, he realized the ground was bare due to human activities.

More importantly, this place oozed a relatively dense spiritual energy.

"There must be something about this rock."

Jared gazed at the boulder only to realize it housed a usual and shallow cave. In fact, it was so shallow he could see the other end right from where he was.

There's nothing special about this cave, but having a boulder in the middle of a dense forest is unnatural. I should probably check out this rock.

So, Jared decided to try again by closing his eyes slightly before releasing his spiritual sense in the direction of the rock. Just as he did so, his spiritual sense was deflected by a powerful force coming from the rock.

"Someone used magecraft on this rock," he noted, puzzled.

Jared opened his eyes again and beheld that cave opening. Then, he climbed in without a second thought.

To his surprise, the view was completely different once he got in.

There was a stretch of stone houses surrounded by a wall.

A gate tower stood erected at the front with the words—Crimson Palace inscribed in strikingly red color.

What? Did someone use an illusion spell to hide this whole place?

No regular person could see Crimson Palace in that cave. One would enter Crimson Palace by stepping into the cave, and going through the cave enabled one to break the illusion spell to see Crimson Palace.

"This clan is pretty interesting. Their leader must be powerful to be able to cast this illusion spell."

With that thought in mind, Jared went toward the entrance of the palace.

This is a suitable place for cultivation since it is filled with spiritual energy. The elders of this clan are really wise to pick a place like this.

Just as Jared reached the entrance, two women dressed in purple stopped him.

"Who are you, and what business do you have at the Crimson Palace?" one of them interrogated loudly with her face gloomed.

Jared could sense that her aura was hostile, so he quickly explained himself.

"Please forgive me. I don't mean to intrude. I happened to be exploring this area, and I came across this cave."

"If you really ended up here by accident, then leave while you can before we take action against you," they said with their deterrent aura blocking Jared off.

Jared smiled. To him, there was no way these two Senior Grandmaster-level women could stop him. They were not powerful enough to harm Jared even if he did nothing to retaliate. Yet, since he had no intention of starting a fight and was at fault for trespassing on others' territory, he decided to take their warning and leave.

"Now, there's no need for that. I'll leave..." Jared said, turning away, but before he could take another step, a girl in blue jumped down in front of him from the stone wall.

"Hold on," she called out.

Jared looked at her in surprise. "Yes?"

The Man's Decree Novel Read Online Chapter 1238

Chapter 1238 The Kingdom Of Women

The girl looked like she was in her teens, yet she had already reached a Senior Grandmaster level and was highly talented.

"Are you Jared Chance?" she asked.

Jared was taken aback, but he quickly answered, "Y-Yes. How do you know me?"

I've never been to this place. It's so far away from Horington. I'm sure I've never seen this girl before, either.

"I knew it! I was just thinking you look just like him."

Speaking, she ran over happily and looked at him with admiration in her eyes. "I saw you at the martial arts forum where you defeated Edgar and killed Warren, the director of the Warriors Alliance in Jadeborough. I know you destroyed a few sects and families in Jadeborough a few days ago and even challenged the Norton family. I think what you did was awesome. I actually wanted to go look for you in Jadeborough, but my sister said no, so..." the girl answered chirpily, trying her best to be polite toward Jared.

Jared was shocked that the news of him undoing the Norton family and those affiliated with them had spread far and wide.

I can only say I'm famous in the martial arts world, but this is not necessarily a good thing.

"Well..."

Jared was at a loss for words, for that was the first time he felt someone adored him as a role model.

Looking at the enthusiastic girl, he felt fortunate that she did not make the trip to Jadeborough in the end. He could not imagine him indirectly causing her any harm if she encountered danger on her way there.

“Come. Follow me. I’ll bring you to my sister. She’ll be over the moon to see you,” the girl said as she went pulled Jared into the palace.

“By the way, I’m Millie Jingle. My sister likes you a lot. She checks out news about you on the forum, and she even keeps your photos. She thinks I don’t know about it, but I do!”

Jared let the girl drag him along as they passed through the palace.

Along the way, he saw many women dressed in purple, and they all looked at Millie reverently as she ushered Jared in. Among them, Jared also spotted a few women in white who waded through the crowd.

Wait. Don’t tell me I’m in the Kingdom of Women. Is that why they’re looking at me like this and whispering among themselves?

Jared lowered his head uneasily at their stare and locked his gaze on the ground as he followed behind the girl.

“Millie, are there only women in Crimson Palace?” he asked curiously.

“Yes. The elders only allowed us to take in female disciples. Besides, they must be virgins,” Millie answered candidly without shying away.

Then, the girl introduced places in Crimson Palace and told Jared about its history.

Her hospitality made Jared feel welcomed and at home.

I can’t believe this place only has women. I bet many men must’ve tried to get into this place. That’s probably why they used an illusion spell to hide this place. It’ll save them the hassle of having to deal with uninvited guests.

Jared followed Millie around until they came to a building that looked like a palace.

The guards did not stop them when Millie brought Jared in.

Once they entered, Millie went to one of the rooms and knocked.