

Chapter 1464 This Is Brandon's Child

Initially, Laney assumed Suzanne lied about the baby being Brandon's as a means of survival. However, after Suzanne was brought back, despite intense questioning, she staunchly claimed the baby was Brandon's. She even adamantly proposed a DNA paternity test.

Laney's doubts grew due to Suzanne's firm assertions.

Could Brandon have had an unintended encounter with Suzanne while under the influence of alcohol? Or had Suzanne cunningly arranged a sexual encounter with him?

Considering that Janet's appearance could be modified without surgery, it was feasible that Suzanne employed some method to conceive Brandon's child.

These intricate questions left Laney in a quandary. She was unsure whether to have Suzanne admitted to the hospital or to inform Brandon about the situation.

She couldn't resist sneaking glances at Janet to gauge her reaction.

Janet's face turned noticeably darker after hearing the news.

She looked at Laney with a furrowed brow. "So, that guy is the father of Suzanne's baby? Does that mean... he already has a wife and child?"

Seeing her expression become increasingly severe, Laney rushed to clarify, "Don't fret, Janet. Suzanne is just a pawn for Jeremy. She couldn't possibly be carrying Brandon's child. She's merely causing a fuss. Pay her no mind."

She then turned to the bodyguard, who was awaiting orders. "You may take Suzanne to any hospital. Just ensure she doesn't die."

"Understood." The bodyguard was about to leave upon receiving the instruction but was halted by Janet.

"Wait! I know Suzanne. I'll accompany you."

"What..." The bodyguard looked at Laney, visibly flustered.

Being a new bodyguard, he was unaware of who Janet was. Believing her to be just a friend of Laney's, he didn't dare permit anyone to visit Suzanne without Laney's approval.

Laney blurted out, "Haven't you lost your memory? How do you remember Suzanne?"

Janet responded casually, "When I was living with my bro...Jeremy, Suzanne resided in the adjacent room. Hence, I'm acquainted with her."

Laney looked surprised at this. "Didn't she cause trouble for you?"

"Jeremy forbade her from approaching me. However, she constantly flaunted her belly in my presence. Initially, I didn't understand her intentions, but if what you're saying is accurate, and she's carrying Brandon's child, then it's starting to make sense."

Laney, taken aback, tried to defend Brandon. "You don't actually believe Suzanne, do you? I highly doubt that Brandon is the father. He truly cares about you... "

"You're not certain, are you?" Janet cut her off. "Take me to see her. What if Suzanne's claim is true?"

Looking distressed, Laney conceded, "Alright, let's go see her."

However, just as a precaution, she asked the bodyguard to notify Brandon. Then, she accompanied Janet to the basement to visit Suzanne.

In the basement, Suzanne was curled up on a dingy, old carpet. Her face was gaunt, and she clutched her slightly distended belly in pain, crying intermittently, "Ouch, it hurts! My baby... Help me! Bring Brandon here! I'm pregnant with his baby!"

The door's bodyguard shot her a cold, contemptuous glance. "If you were indeed carrying Mr. Larson's child, why would he leave you here?"

His words seemed to fuel Suzanne's hysteria. She began shouting, "I'm carrying Brandon's child! He can perform a paternity test! If I lose my baby, you all will pay with your lives!"