

Chapter 648 The Gambling Ship

Cannon's words only irritated Liam.

A tide of rage surged through Liam at this time, and he needed to vent it out. Luckily, he had the perfect instrument in front of him. He raised his hand and beat Cannon again.

Yusuf's death was hard for Liam to bear. Now, he hated the whole of Black Spider, and not just the individuals that wronged him.

Rennes wanted to marry Julie? His fiancée was at the point of getting married to someone else!

The bastards! This was a humiliation that Liam couldn't bear.

Rennes was asking for death that he would soon get.

Liam lifted Cannon and questioned with rage, "Now, tell me exactly where Julie is. When will the wedding hold? Answer me! And if you play around with me, I'll kill you!"

Cannon gulped and answered, "She's in a small town in Tihirang, but the wedding will be held on a gambling ship a week from now. They should have already started making preparations by now."

preparations by now."

Liam thought about it and figured that it was too late to go straight to Tihirang now. He would have to meet them at the gambling ship instead. He looked at Cannon again and ordered, "Tell me how to get on the ship and where to board it. I want to know everything."

Cannon nodded desperately and hastily answered, "The day before the wedding, the ship will come to delta region to carry people. However, a ticket is required to get on the ship. In order to get the ticket, you have to spend one hundred million in the Black Spider's casino.

Also, you need to bring one hundred million dollars with you in exchange for chips before getting on the ship. A ticket can permit you to come with a servant and female companion. I've told you everything I know. Will you let me go now?"

Cannon looked at Liam eagerly, but Liam said with a sneer, "I will let you go after I have saved her and have her with me. But if I can't save her, then you'll die."

Liam wished he could burn Cannon to ashes right now to revenge Yusuf's death.

But he couldn't do it yet. A living Cannon was still useful to him until Julie was rescued. If Liam didn't think he was valuable now, Cannon would have been long dead.

After that threat, Liam turned around and walked out of the dungeon. Before he left, he ordered the dungeon staff to strengthen its security.

Locked up once again, Cannon looked miserable. Of course he didn't believe what Liam said. He wasn't stupid.

He knew how the Dark Night Organization worked. It didn't matter if Julie was saved or not. He would end up dead.

All he prayed for right now was that he wouldn't be killed before Liam boarded the gambling ship. With Liam gone, he would have a chance to be saved. He had very little hope of it happening, but it was better than nothing.

As Liam walked away, he thought about his next step.

Cannon wouldn't have lied about the gambling ship, not when his life was at risk, and when he knew that living or dying depended on his answer.

Cannon cherished his life so much that he would never put it at risk by lying.

Liam was certain of that. So, he had to set things in order. First, he had to get the ticket to the gambling ship, then find one hundred million dollars, and finally, choose the people he would take with him to the gambling shop.

The first two were quite easy to solve.

The one problem Liam didn't have, was money. He just needed to spend enough money in the Black Spider's casino to get the ticket.

He planned to take Fiona and Mehdi along with him on the ship. He would be more confident if he had his people around. After all, his priority was saving his fiancée, before fighting with the Black Spider.

Having made up his mind, Liam called the two people who agreed to join him without hesitation.

Even after everything was in place, Liam still felt a little uneasy.

He never imagined a marriage could be in their plan. Rennes' action was what made him the most furious, but he knew what was most urgent now, and that was getting Julie out of there.

"I will save you, Julie. Then I will marry you and spend the rest of my life with you," he muttered to himself.
