

Chapter 650 Boarding The Ship

A few days later, in a hidden spot near an unknown dock, Liam, along with Fiona and Mehdi, huddled together, eagerly anticipating the arrival of the gambling ship.

Just a few days back, Liam had splurged a whopping one hundred million dollars at the Black Spider's casino.

He couldn't deny that the games at the Black Spider's casino were quite sneaky.

Whether you won or lost seemed to be entirely in the casino's hands, and their clever tricks made losing gamblers oddly cheerful, convincing them they'd surely strike it rich next time.

In a mere forty-eight hours, Liam had kissed goodbye to about seventy million. Even though he knew he possessed the skills to outsmart the casino, he had to play the part of an ordinary gambler, keeping a low profile and not drawing too much attention.

As long as Liam could snag that ticket, even if he lost a hundred million dollars, it was just a drop in the bucket for

Besides Liam, Fiona, and Mehdi, there was Cannon, all tied up next to them.

Cannon got jitters watching the gambling ship getting closer to the dock.

"Hey, the ship's almost here. I'm not lying to you, right? Let me come aboard with you. I know the ship inside out, and I can be your lifesaver. I promise, I won't mess with your business!"

Liam flashed a chilly grin and replied, "No thanks. Appreciate your offer, but I'm good without you!"

Right from the get-go, Cannon's fate was sealed. Without Liam's say-so, the fuming Mehdi roped Cannon to a hefty rock.

"Bastard, you broke your words. I swear that you'll..."

Before he could utter those dreaded words, Cannon, the man in distress, found himself plunging into the sea, courtesy of Mehdi.

A massive burst of water splashed around, but in a heartbeat, peace was restored!

Far away, the ship's whistle gradually filled the air with its mournful sound.

A colossal cruise ship inched closer to the shore at a leisurely pace.

The cruise's exterior was opulent beyond belief, worth a fortune, to say the least.

"Let's go to the dock."

With Mehdi and Fiona by his side, Liam strolled towards the dock.

As the cruise ship drew near, a crowd of people leisurely gathered on the shore.

Just like Liam, they were all risk-takers, ready to step onto the ship. Each of them sported fancy attire, and their attractive companions by their side oozed allure. Quite a few wore bikinis, accentuating their enviable curves.

Meanwhile, the distinct sound of leather boots echoed, and a formidable group of nearly a hundred people emerged, armed to the teeth.

Liam's brow creased. This was no ordinary crew; they were a highly-trained military unit, equipped with cutting-edge weaponry.

At the rear of the team, heavy artillery loomed. With this squad's firepower, sinking a colossal cruise ship like this, weighing over ten thousand tons, would be a cakewalk.

Meanwhile, the ship pulled into the dock.

A man in butler attire descended the gangway, sporting a joyful expression as he surveyed the people on the shore.

"Ladies and gentlemen," he began, his voice smooth as silk, "I'm sure you've been eagerly anticipating this. On behalf of the Black Spider, I extend a warm welcome to all of you. Tonight, we hope you have an unforgettable time, and may each one of you emerge as the ultimate winners!"

Then, the gamblers lined up to flaunt their tickets and board the ship in an orderly fashion!

Little did anyone know, buried on the sea floor, just over ten meters from the gambling ship, lay the younger brother of the person in charge of the notorious Black Spider.

With a sly wink, Liam signaled to Mehdi and Fiona. Today, they were all incognito, their true selves hidden from prying eyes.

"Listen up. We're entering the heart of Black Spider territory. Keep your cool. Don't do anything impulsive, and, for heaven's sake, don't blow your cover!" Liam commanded.

Both of them nodded in agreement. Liam glanced at his watch, realizing the clock was ticking. The trio then slipped into the queue of eager gamblers, moving closer to the awaiting ship!
