

Chapter 706 Preparing For The Wedding

Burdened by a sense of disappointment, Liam entered the room without uttering another word.

As he swung open the door, he noticed that the fake Julie's abdomen had expanded significantly. It was a sign that the fetus was growing healthily.

Sadly, it was not his own child.

His child with Julie had perished in Salem.

At that instant, Vivian was engrossed in her exercises. Hearing the door creak open, she turned around and beamed as she realized Liam had returned.

"Welcome home," she said, her face brimming with happiness.

Although Liam was disheveled, Vivian didn't care. She hurriedly approached to embrace him.

Liam halted her with an outstretched hand. He knew the truth now and couldn't accept her hug.

"I need to clean up first. I'll take a shower," Liam asserted.

Then, Liam rushed to the bathroom and began tidying himself.

The water streaming down his body gradually carried the filth away.

Twenty minutes later, Liam stood in front of the mirror, looking as dashing as ever, even though a bit thinner after three hard-working months.

"The real game starts now," he muttered to his reflection.

Gathering himself, he exited the bathroom and said to Vivian, "My grandpa's birthday is just a week away. It's been ages since the Hoffman family had any real celebration. Let's use the occasion to also have our wedding."

Elated, Vivian agreed. "Of course, whatever you say."

She then played the role of a dutiful spouse, attempting to towel-dry Liam's hair.

Liam was filled with disgust but managed to conceal it. He offered a counterfeit smile, pretending to be pleased.

After his hair was dry, he made a quick excuse of having urgent matters to attend to and dashed out of the room.

Once Liam had gone, Vivian's expression shifted.

Lately, she'd been preoccupied. She was well aware that Timothy's assassin had failed to eliminate Julie.

This failure had turned into a significant obstacle for her. Over the past three months, she had pressed Timothy for updates on Julie, but to no avail.

While Vivian couldn't fathom why Julie hadn't sought Liam out directly, she was uneasy. She desperately wanted to marry Liam without delay, fearing Julie might surface and wreak havoc.

After all, if Julie was still somewhere in the delta region, news of the impending wedding was bound to reach her. At that moment, Vivian couldn't help but make a silent prayer.

"Please, let nothing stand in my way," she whispered to herself.

After departing from his place, Liam first relayed the news to Sergio.

Sergio was elated and exclaimed, "Finally, after all these years, you're settling down and starting a family! I'll make sure your wedding is an extravagant affair!"

Liam responded with a smile before hanging up. His expression instantly hardened.

He hadn't disclosed the whole truth to his grandfather, or what his actual plans were. He wanted to ensure that when Sergio discovered the truth, his rage would

This was also for the sake of protecting the Hoffman family!

Once that was settled, Liam returned to the fort of the Dark Night Organization and directed everyone to print the invites. He made sure that the delta region's power players were invited to both Sergio's birthday and his own wedding.

More importantly, he wanted to make a splash and spread the news throughout the delta region.

In reality, though, not many from the delta region would attend the event. This area was traditionally under the sway of the Black Spider, and most major powers had some connection with the Duncan family. Even if Liam had eradicated all Black Spider members in the delta region, most forces would maintain a stance of neutrality.

The future was uncertain, after all!

Liam was well aware of this. But through sending out invites, he also hoped that Julie would catch wind of the news.

He was convinced that if Julie heard the news, she would undoubtedly make an appearance.
