

Chapter 730 Change

Julie gazed at the frustrated Liam, her heart aching deeply.

Upon her insistence, two tranquilizers were administered to Liam, and he gradually drifted into sleep.

Liam needed that slumber. Only in sleep could he find a momentary relief for his frayed nerves.

Once certain Liam was asleep, Julie quietly exited the room.

When she reached a secluded spot, all the emotions she'd bottled up overwhelmed her. She sank to a corner and wept uncontrollably.

Deep down, she believed it was her fault Liam was no longer recognized as the Hoffman family's heir.

Had Liam maintained that title, he could have had everything under his control in the Hoffman family's mansion, preventing Rennes and Adelina from making their moves.

Futhermore, Annie wouldn't have died and Jaxtyn wouldn't have been so seriously injured.

Julie felt it was all her fault.

Julie felt it was all her fault.

She chastised herself for her shortcomings, thinking she remained the anchor that weighed Liam down, unchanged from their past.

Amidst her self-reproach, a thought sprung to mind.

Suddenly, she recalled the doctor Liam had spoken of. It was the one with a miraculous cure for Jaxtyn.

The more she pondered, the more resolute she became. She couldn't let Liam shoulder it all.

Determined, she decided to seek out this cure herself. With it, she hoped to heal Jaxtyn and her scars, ensuring she wasn't a burden to Liam any longer.

With this in mind, Julie hurried back to Liam's side, gently kissed his sleeping forehead, left a note, and departed stealthily.

By the next day, the effects of the tranquilizer had gradually worn off.

Liam's eyes fluttered open from his deep slumber. A hollow sensation gripped his heart.

His gaze darted around, searching, but Julie was nowhere in sight. Instead, he found a note she'd left behind.

The note detailed Julie's reasons for leaving. It emphasized that if Liam truly cared for her, he would stay away. She now had the means to defend herself and she implored Liam to trust her this time.

After absorbing the words, Liam tucked the note away, a somber expression shadowing his face. The thought of chasing after Julie never crossed his mind.

Considering the weight of responsibilities he now bore, perhaps it was wise to let Julie stay away from Invone for a while.

As Liam pushed thoughts of Julie aside, his focus shifted to assessing the present circumstances and strategizing a way forward.

His immediate concern was looking for his grandfather and confronting the Duncan family.

With this in mind, Liam flexed his muscles, testing the extent of his injuries. They hadn't completely healed, but the recovery was swift. He felt confident that his condition wouldn't hinder him in a confrontation.

He summoned Fiona, instructing, "Fiona, we can't remain idle. Gather information on the Duncan family. We need to be ready for what's coming."

Fiona nodded in agreement. Gathering intel was her forte, so she immediately set out to execute the task.

In Invone, the incident that happened in the Hoffman family's mansion had already ruffled the peace, and the resurgence of the Duncan family threatened to shatter the long-standing equilibrium.

The Duncan family's army, which had been stationed in Kuba for ages, returned to the city as well.

They reclaimed their territory in delta region, and even the fortresses of the Dark Night Organization were falling one after the other.
