

Chapter 146 Tyrone Will Abandon You

---

Tyrone didn't make his way to the office until Sabrina was done with her breakfast.

As Sabrina fielded the incoming call, she was resting against the bed's backrest, engrossed in a book.

A couple of books on pregnancy and child rearing that she had bought were on the nightstand.

Fear of Tyrone discovering these books in the past kept her ignorant. But now, she finally had time to peruse them.

There was no name displayed on the incoming call. Sabrina's new device was void of old contact information.

She picked up the call and greeted, "Hello?"

A female voice echoed through the receiver scornfully. "Sabrina, are you very proud now? Tyrone made your relationship public, and you are pregnant. Do you feel happy?"

It was Evelyn.

Tyrone had taken legal actions against her and had her fired from the branch company.

Yet, due to the legal process taking its time, Evelyn was not in custody.

On the day Sabrina was discharged, Evelyn was at the hospital. She saw Tyrone helping Sabrina into his car, jealousy seething from the branch company.

Yet, due to the legal process taking its time, Evelyn was not in custody.

On the day Sabrina was discharged, Evelyn was at the hospital. She saw Tyrone helping Sabrina into his car, jealousy seething within her.

Why?

Why could a country girl like Sabrina be showered with Tyrone's affection?

Sabrina was not worthy.

Sabrina responded coolly, "Honestly, I should be thanking you. If you hadn't leaked the news, Tyrone wouldn't have chosen me over Galilea and revealed our relationship. He was about to divorce me for Galilea. But you made him reconsider. Evelyn, I'm genuinely thankful."

Upon hearing this, Evelyn was silent for a few seconds before responding with a biting curse, "Sabrina! Bitch! You bitch! I'll make you pay! You bitch!"

"Your threats are limited to phone calls now!"

Evelyn, clearly frustrated, laughed. "Sabrina, don't get too comfortable! The CEO of Blakely Group is about to change! Tyrone is on the brink of termination! It's all your fault! You're a jinx! Not satisfied with causing your father's demise, you've now harmed Tyrone. He will leave you. Mark my words!"

now harmed Tyrone. He will leave you. Mark my words!"

"The CEO of Blakely Group is changing? Who?" Sabrina inquired, nonchalant.

"Just wait and see! What? Tyrone didn't mention about the board meeting today?" Evelyn scoffed.

Sabrina didn't respond.

Ever since her hospitalization, Tyrone had delegated her work. She had been thinking about quitting anyway, and so she had stopped keeping tabs on the company's affairs.

Tyrone had been coming home early these days, and when Sabrina asked about work, he always assured her that all was well.

It appeared that he was consoling her.

After working for the company for a long time, she knew Tyrone as a decisive and tough leader. He didn't have all the board members on his side.

Evelyn, sensing Sabrina's silence, prided herself as she continued, "You may not know this because you joined the company late. When Tyrone assumed office, he was autocratic and tough, upsetting several directors. One complained to the chairman, but to no avail. Eventually, Tyrone forced this director to sell most of his shares. Everyone feared they'd be driven out after the chairman's departure. Even though Tyrone is not as tough as before, the directors have long held a grudge against him. They have found the perfect opportunity and candidate now. What do you think their choice would be?

It's all because of you! Had you not seduced Tyrone, I wouldn't have spilled your secret, leading to the stock market chaos. Tyrone wouldn't have fired my uncle for your sake, giving those directors a chance to reproach him. You're a disaster!"

Feeling a mix of emotions, Sabrina said, "Thanks for the heads-up. That explains why he told me he hadn't been able to spend time with me before and that he'd be home with me and our child more. He has his own private ventures. Even if he isn't the CEO, we'd lead a comfortable life."

A moment of silence hung in the air before Evelyn snapped back, voice brimming with irritation. "Bitch! Stop putting on a brave face! Just you wait and see!"

She found it hard to believe.

It must be that Sabrina was trying to appear tougher than she felt.

It was ludicrous to think Tyrone would resign as CEO of Blakely Group for her sake.

He was still in his prime, seated high on his throne of power, bathed in prestige and brilliance.

Why on earth would he let go?

After ending the call, Sabrina sat on her bed, her mind echoing with Evelyn's harsh words.

If the accusations held true, who would be the suitable replacement according to the board members?

They certainly wouldn't trust professional managers.

The pool of potential candidates was scarce.

Could it possibly be Tyrone's uncle?

Despite being on the board, he rarely meddled in the company's affairs and had his hands full managing his chain of catering company. Not long ago, his wife had informed Sabrina that he was dealing with a situation at a branch in Belfield.

It certainly couldn't be Tyrone's cousin.

Tyrone had attempted to elevate him in the past, but he had declined, expressing a desire to focus on his research.

Then, the most likely candidate would be Larry.

His gentle and affable nature was likely to win over the board.

After some contemplation, Sabrina decided to call Tyrone.

The call was picked up swiftly, Tyrone's voice filtering through.

"Sabrina, is something wrong? Are you feeling unwell?"

"No. I just wanted to know if you're having a board meeting today."

Tyrone occupied the head of the meeting table, with Kylan standing behind him, while the directors sat on both sides.

Before answering the phone, Tyrone signaled for silence, and everyone turned their attention to him.

"Who told you about that? Don't overthink it. Rest well," Tyrone assured her gently.

The directors present would never have imagined that the notoriously tough businessman could display such tenderness, had they not witnessed it.

"If you don't share the truth with me, I won't be able to rest."

"I'll fill you in when I return, alright?"

Sabrina came to the realization that she couldn't obtain any information from Tyrone. And even if she did, there was nothing she could do with it.

Whatever the situation was, she would learn of it by evening.

She had planned on divorcing Tyrone and didn't care if he remained the CEO or not. However, she didn't want him to lose his position due to her.

She no longer wanted anything to do with him.

Tyrone had dedicated so much to Blakely Group, earning the respect of his employees through his skills and capabilities. It wasn't fair for him to be stripped of his recognition due to internal politics and power plays within the senior ranks.

After ending the call, Tyrone set his phone down on the table, sweeping his gaze over the people before him. "Let's continue."

The chairman was absent due to illness, leaving the vice-chairman in charge of the proceedings.

Harrell wasted no time in laying out his case. "Our CEO and general manager, Tyrone Blakely, has allowed his personal life and emotional issues to tarnish the company's image during his tenure. This has resulted in a decrease in stock prices and a significant shrink in the company's market value, shaking the confidence of our shareholders, some of whom have demanded answers.

Furthermore, Tyrone's mishandling of the branch company's fire incident led to significant public backlash, damaging the company's public image. The public's trust in us has been undermined.

On top of that, despite Theo's years of dedication and good performance, Tyrone unjustly dismissed him for personal reasons, a clear abuse of his power and a violation of company rules. As such, I propose that Tyrone be relieved of his duties as the CEO and general manager!"