

Chapter 814 Bullied

The following day, Yesenia and Julie had something to deal with at the Pearl Company, requiring Liam to take charge of sending Asher to school.

This marked Liam's first time handling the school drop-off, filling him with natural joy. However, Asher appeared unhappy from the moment he woke up.

Puzzled, Liam asked, "Asher, what's troubling you? Don't you want me to take you to school?"

Asher shook his head and, after a prolonged silence, said quietly, "I just don't like this new home."

Taken aback, Liam asked, "Why is that?"

Asher replied in a subdued tone, "If I hadn't moved here, I wouldn't have to go to that school."

Liam felt a pang in his heart upon hearing this. He sensed something amiss in Asher's strong rejection to attending the school.

"It's alright. You can go to school today. If you're still unhappy at Hawthorn Kindergarten, I'll find a different school for you," he reassured Asher with a smile.

Initially, everything seemed fine, but during recess on the playground, an unexpected incident occurred.

Initially, everything seemed fine, but during recess on the playground, an unexpected incident occurred.

A boy named Cyrus Ortiz, accompanied by a group of kids, encircled Asher and taunted, "Asher, how dare you show up here? You're just a fatherless nobody. You don't belong in our school. Get out of here!"

Following his words, Cyrus shoved Asher, who, in resistance, angrily said, "I have a father. He's back!"

Disdainfully, Cyrus sneered, "So what? He's just a loser!"

This provoked Asher's anger beyond containment. He pushed back against the surrounding children and engaged in a scuffle with Cyrus.

Despite Asher's efforts, Cyrus, being stronger, swiftly gained the upper hand and pinned Asher down. Amidst the struggle, Cyrus continued, "You're just a little loser! How dare you hit me? I'll make sure you're kicked out of this kindergarten today!"

The commotion grew loud, drawing the attention of a female teacher who rushed in to separate the boys and stop the fight.

The teacher frowned and said to Cyrus, "Cyrus, you can't hit Asher. If you do this again, there will be consequences!"

Then, turning to Asher, her expression turned stern.

She scolded, "You can't hit others either. How can you behave so rudely at such a young age? You don't even have a father. No wonder you're so disrespectful!"

Asher, upon hearing her words, burst into tears. Amidst sobs, he shouted, "Don't say such mean things about my dad!"

Liam, witnessing the unfair treatment of Asher, emerged from his hiding spot.

Although he rarely resorted to physical violence against women, the teacher's unjust treatment of Asher stirred his anger.

Before the teacher could speak, Liam, with a cold demeanor, slapped her and said, "Is this how you educate children? What a shame!"

The female teacher felt both confused and frightened after being slapped. She understood the social dynamics at play in the school. Most of the children here came from affluent and influential families. She knew that most of the parents were not individuals she could afford to upset or offend.

She asked cautiously, "Who are you?"

Liam replied icily, "I'm Liam, Asher's father!"

Upon hearing this, the teacher regained her arrogance. "Oh, so you're Asher's father. Your son hit someone. As a teacher, I have the authority to discipline him! I
