

Chapter 1615 Interrogation

After hanging up the phone, Janet stared blankly at her phone, unsure of her next move.

She paced around the room anxiously for a moment, trying to reorganize her thoughts. She hastily picked out her own set of clothes to change into and was about to wash her face when she heard the sound of a car engine turning off downstairs.

Her heart skipped a beat, and she rushed down without taking the time to freshen up.

As she descended the stairs, she spotted Brandon, looking a little weary as he entered the house.

"Brandon!" Janet called out softly and quickly threw herself into his arms.

Brandon caught her in his arms and held her waist.

"Miss me that much?" he teased.

Janet paid no attention to his question. She went straight to sniffing, meticulously checking his body for any feminine scent and examining his neck closely.

After ensuring that there was no lingering scent of Audrey or any other suspicious traces, she finally relaxed. She then pushed him away and snorted coldly.

Caught off guard, Brandon touched his nose and smiled helplessly. "Why are you upset?" he asked.

Janet frowned and grabbed his collar fiercely. "Where did you go last night? Who were you with? What happened? Tell me everything. I want the truth!" she said menacingly.

She locked her eyes on Brandon's as she bombarded him with questions, afraid he might lie out of guilt.

Brandon knew that she felt insecure because of Audrey. Smiling helplessly, he bent down and scooped her up in a princess carry and placed her down carefully on the couch.

Janet blushed from his natural and intimate move and lost her train of thought for a moment.

"Why are your feet so cold?" Brandon asked suddenly.

He held her feet in his palms naturally, warming them up. "Were you running around without wearing shoes?" he asked a little reproachfully.

Janet flinched a little from his question and stammered, "I was in a hurry to see you..."

"Even if you were in a hurry to see me, you shouldn't walk around without shoes," Brandon said in concern.

He pinched Janet's cheek affectionately and gathered both her feet onto his lap. "Let me warm them up for you," he said gently. The murderous intent he had when he was with Audrey was completely gone. "Have you had breakfast? What would you like to eat? I'll have the servants prepare it," he continued gently, gazed deeply into Janet's eyes.

Janet found herself momentarily stunned. The anger she had felt since the early morning was taken over by a sense of helplessness. "No... I am not hungry," she managed to utter.

However, thoughts of the scandal involving the cousins and Audrey's provocation soon resurfaced in her mind. Unable to contain her insecurity, she finally mustered the courage to ask, "Where did you and Audrey go last night? Why didn't you come back all night?"

Brandon gently flicked Janet's forehead and asked in resignation, "What's wrong? Don't you trust me? What did you think I did last night?"

Janet pursed her lips and felt aggrieved. She mumbled helplessly, "Do you know what Audrey said to me last night? She's your cousin, yet she wanted... She actually wanted..."

Audrey's intentions were so disturbing that Janet found it difficult to get it out of her mouth. After a slight pause, she finally managed to say, "She wanted to have a child with you, and she even drugged me... I have never met such a shameless person. What if she played dirty and managed to get into bed with you?"

Her voice started to choke up as she spoke. The frustration and panic that were building up all morning finally erupted. She buried her face in Brandon's chest and sobbed.

Brandon held Janet tightly, and his heart ached. "Don't worry, nothing happened last night. How could I possibly touch anyone other than you? Trust me, okay?" he said reassuringly.

After crying for a while, Janet finally calmed down. She bit Brandon's arm in a moment of rage and demanded, "Tell me! What did you do last night?"

"Alright, alright, I'll tell you," Brandon replied as he finally surrendered.

After wiping Janet's tears away, Brandon related last night's events to her.