

Chapter 1617 Let Nature Take Its Course

A bittersweet happiness washed over Janet.

She wondered if it was just her crazy luck that she had a husband who did not want kids when she could not have them?

However, she quickly brushed that thought aside.

It was too good to be true. It felt so unreal that it was scary. Janet could not believe that such a perfect life could exist.

Thus, Brandon probably just said those words to make her feel better.

At this realization, she studied his expression intently. There he was, all smiles. Perfect and impeccable. She marveled at how well he could hide his real feelings.

Seeing the look on her face, Brandon raised an eyebrow and playfully asked, "Why are you looking at me like that? What are you thinking? Don't you trust me?"

Janet pursed her lips and fell into a deep thought. After a moment, she finally shook her head and answered, "I was just think about the possibility of us having a baby."

Brandon chuckled. "Don't think too much, silly. Just like I've said, baby or no baby, my love for you remains unchanged."

Janet blinked her misty eyes and nuzzled against his chest with her arms wrapped around his waist. "I want to have a symbol of our love."

Brandon, who was usually stern and emotionless, melted. His gaze softened with affection. And when he spoke, his voice was warm and soothing like a spring breeze. "Let's see where life takes us. But know this, with or without a child, you're my world."

As Janet locked eyes with him, she felt warm in her heart. She buried her face in his embrace and whispered, "The feeling's mutual. No matter what the future holds or if we can have a child or not, I'll always love you."

When she said those words, she could feel his heart racing, echoing every word she said. Clearly, her profession of love reached within the depths of his spirit.

For a moment, their hearts seemed intertwined, and love flowed in their veins. It was a magical moment, one she wished could be frozen in time.

Janet held Brandon closer and listened to his heartbeat, which increased with each second. With a newfound resolve, she decided she would do everything she could to have a child they could call theirs.

With medical advancements and her being young enough, there must be a way she could bear her child. Maybe she could reach out to her mom for some advice.

Besides, with her memory loss, she could not devote herself to work like she used to. So, why not take advantage of this gap in her life to plan for pregnancy and surprise Brandon?

The thought of his surprised expression, when he found out that she was pregnant, brought a smile to Janet's lips and made her determination grow stronger.

The more she thought about it, the more she realized that now was the right time to get pregnant. Maybe, just maybe, the process might help her recall her lost memories.

Once Brandon left for his own business, she immediately dialed Johanna.

On the other end of the line, Johanna was delighted to receive her daughter's call. "What's going on? Why'd you suddenly call? Did Brandon do something? Tell me, and I'll straighten him out!"

"No, it's not that," Janet quickly reassured her. "I... I need your help with something..."

Her words were laced with hesitance. Although Johanna was her mother, Janet felt awkward to talk to her due to her amnesia. And broaching the topic of wanting a child felt... odd.

As her daughter rarely asked her for help, Johanna was eager to lend her a hand. "Silly girl, don't be shy. Whatever it is, I'll do my best to help you."

"Mom, I... I..." Janet closed her eyes as if mustering her courage and quickly said, "I want to try for a baby, and I thought you might have some advice for me."

"A baby?" Johanna uttered in surprise as she recalled her daughter's infertility. "Oh... Um..."

She didn't know Janet was aware of her own condition now and tried to avoid the painful truth. After a brief pause, she asked, "Why do you ask all of a sudden?"

Janet's face flushed. She was hesitant at first but eventually admitted her reason. "I want... I want to have a baby with Brandon as soon as possible."

Johanna pondered for a moment and tactfully responded, "You shouldn't rush into having a child. Just let nature take its course. Maybe it will happen on its own when the time is right."

Chapter 1617 Let Nature Tak...

 +120 Points at most responded, "You shouldn't rush into having a child. Just let nature take its course. Maybe it will happen on its own when the time is right."