

Chapter 863 Conspiracy

Liam maintained a thoughtful silence throughout the dinner.

He didn't think Lenny could successfully invite the general manager. He was not concerned about it, either.

Liam, being a dad, was contemplating how to hold a fantastic birthday party for his son, using his resources and efforts.

After some time, the dinner came to an end. Lenny invited Julie to a cafe shop, but she firmly declined.

They then went their separate ways. Julie escorted Asher home while Liam politely excused himself, citing some pressing matters, and departed alone.

At the Breeze Bar on West Street in Salem.

The bar teetered on the edge of bankruptcy, with scant customers and lethargic waitstaff. Several of the waitstaffs were even nodding off at the bar counter.

Liam entered and settled at a table. Shortly after, a big, rough man entered and sat directly opposite Liam.

This individual was Carsen, who had arrived in Salem merely three hours ago. Liam had asked for him to come to assist him.

Carsen was sought out for assistance due to his unique expertise in urban living, setting him apart from the rest of the team. His comprehensive knowledge of various city aspects and efficiency in accomplishing tasks made him an invaluable asset.

Following a brief discussion about the information gathered in Invone, the capital, Liam retrieved his high-end ID card and bank card, handing them over to Carsen.

Then, he requested, "Set aside the matters in Invone for now. Tomorrow night, reserve the entire Dragon Manor for me. My son's birthday is approaching, and I'm going to hold a birthday party for him there."

Dragon Manor had risen to become the state's most prestigious estate in the past five years, renowned for its breathtaking views and exquisite cuisine.

Due to its widespread reputation, the Manor had established a set of regulations. Every night, a limited number of guest tables were permitted, each featuring eight dishes. When reserving the entire Manor, a special banquet would be organized, offering the finest dishes.

Naturally, arranging the Dragon Manor banquet would entail a substantial expense. Moreover, it wasn't solely a matter of affording the cost. Ordinary individuals could only join the waiting list, sometimes even enduring for a few years before securing a reservation.

With the birthday banquet scheduled for the next day, waiting in line would be impractical. Therefore, Liam entrusted Carsen with his identity, empowering him to expedite the necessary arrangements.

Silently, Carsen accepted the directive and departed. Being a member of Genesis Island, his focus lay less on worldly affairs and more on fulfilling his responsibilities dutifully.

Following Carsen's departure, Liam pondered before reaching out to Bowen. "Spread the news using my name. I will host a lavish feast at the Dragon Manor for my son's birthday tomorrow night. By the way, regarding the assistance I sought for Pearl Group last time, inform the person who helped that there's an individual named Lenny falsely claiming credit. Advise him to handle the situation."

Upon hearing the news, Bowen expressed his congratulations to Liam's son's birthday before agreeing to take on the task.

After ending the call, Bowen didn't immediately follow Liam's instructions. Instead, he chose to inform his daughter about the situation first.

"Ayla, could you attend a birthday celebration thrown by a significant friend on my behalf? Of course, you can stay the night if it gets late."

Bowen devised a clever strategy. As circumstances worsened in Salem, despite being the mayor, he faced the risk of being ousted.

However, at present, his best course of action was to align himself with Liam. Confronted with significant risks, Bowen had to strategize how to earn Liam's trust as a reliable ally.

And, conveniently, his daughter proved to be the most fitting asset in this situation.

As night descended, something significant was set to unfold in Salem.

Following the release of Bowen's news, influential factions swiftly convened urgent meetings, with the focal point being Liam, the enigmatic figure.

Numerous individuals viewed this as a chance to climb the social ladder and began scheming secretly.