

Chapter 869 Fireworks All Over The Sky

Observing Lenny's actions, Yesenia was reminded of Liam's recent behavior. The contrast between the two was evident.

Suddenly, filled with anger, Yesenia stepped up and loudly cursed Liam, "You're the reason for all this trouble! If you can't stand out, why bother trying? You've humiliated yourself, and now you're dragging our family down with you. Why are you making our lives so miserable?"

Tears welled up in Julie's eyes from the embarrassment, and she didn't stop Yesenia.

This was the first time she felt so let down by Liam. After five years of struggling to raise their son on her own, she had hoped things would improve when he returned. But now, she faced this disappointment.

She was used to feeling embarrassed. That was nothing new. But what about Asher, who is still so young? This could really hurt him.

Liam, on the other hand, seemed unaffected by the harsh words thrown at him. His focus was solely on Asher and Julie, the people he considered his real family.

"Julie, look," Liam said, taking a step forward and gently holding her hand. He pointed to the sky.

Tears gathered in Julie's eyes. She couldn't grasp what Liam was up to at that moment. All she heard was a distant rumbling that grew louder and more persistent.

Julie lifted her gaze and was met with a sky filled with fireworks, creating a stunningly beautiful scene against the night.

Her expression shifted from confusion to shock as she realized this wasn't just any fireworks display. It was something special, arranged just for the occasion. The show kicked off with a simple performance, then a booming firework shot up, bursting into a glittering message: "Happy birthday, Asher!"

Immediately after, the sky was again filled with fireworks, this time forming images of Asher's face with each burst. It showed his face traced back through every one of his birthdays, starting from the age of one, creating a visual timeline in the sky.

Then, as a grand finale, a massive firework in the shape of a birthday cake filled the sky.

As the last of the fireworks faded, Dragon Manor burst into light. Its doors swung open, and a red carpet rolled out. Concierges and bodyguards hurried out, lining up in neat rows along the carpet, all declaring in unison, "Happy birthday, Asher!"

Everyone was amazed by this spectacle.

Asher, wasn't he Liam's son? Did Liam throw such a lavish party for Asher in Dragon Manor?

The room buzzed with conversation, everyone's faces showing clear surprise. Doyle and Lori, who had been the most vocal in their mockery, were now visibly shocked.

They hadn't expected to become the subject of their own jokes.

Lenny, feeling deflated, reflected on the remarkable extent of this birthday party in Salem's history. His main concern now was whether Liam had planned it all.

If Liam was indeed behind this, Lenny knew his chances with Julie would be impossibly low.

Meanwhile, Julie felt a surge of happiness. Holding Asher close, she felt her tears shift from sadness to joy.

Like the others, she wondered if Liam was behind this but chose not to dwell on it.

Whether Liam was behind it or not, she felt content tonight, and that was all that mattered.