

Chapter 1670 What Happened Yesterday

"Good morning, Mrs. Larson," Nightingale greeted curtly before positioning herself in the corner of the living room. She was not one to engage in much conversation and believed that was the best way to both protect Janet and minimize her presence.

Janet glanced at Nightingale occasionally and thought that Nightingale was so still, it was as if she was a breathing backdrop.

She made several attempts to strike up a conversation but ultimately gave up the thought when she saw how serious Nightingale looked.

Soon enough, Janet got used to having Nightingale in the background as she immersed herself in her activities.

Janet sat on the sofa, flipped through some recent fashion magazines, pulled out her art sketches to draw, turned on the TV to watch a drama series, and arranged the freshly delivered flowers.

While Janet busied herself, Nightingale

"Good morning, Mrs. Larson," Nightingale greeted curtly before positioning herself in the corner of the living room. She was not one to engage in much conversation and believed that was the best way to both protect Janet and minimize her presence.

Janet glanced at Nightingale occasionally and thought that Nightingale was so still, it was as if she was a breathing backdrop.

She made several attempts to strike up a conversation but ultimately gave up the thought when she saw how serious Nightingale looked.

Soon enough, Janet got used to having Nightingale in the background as she immersed herself in her activities.

Janet sat on the sofa, flipped through some recent fashion magazines, pulled out her art sketches to draw, turned on the TV to watch a drama series, and arranged the freshly delivered flowers.

While Janet busied herself, Nightingale continued standing motionlessly like a statue. Meanwhile, Janet completely forgot about Nightingale's presence.

Soon, Janet filled the vase with vibrant flowers.

At this moment, Janet heard the sound of a car engine and noticed the front door swinging open abruptly.

Janet felt puzzled. It was too early for Brandon to be back, so who could it be?

She turned her head curiously and saw Johanna entering the villa in a hurry.

"Mom? What brings you here?" Janet stepped forward and greeted her, feeling pleasantly surprised.

Johanna fixed her eyes on Janet as soon as she spotted her. She scrutinized her daughter from head to toe before tightly grasping her hand. "What happened yesterday? Tell me everything," she asked with concern, her face filled with worry.

Janet hesitated for a moment. She didn't want Johanna to worry, so she smiled and replied, "It's nothing serious. Please don't worry too much."

"How could it be nothing serious? I heard from the bodyguards about what happened, and I was so worried about you," Johanna said as she furrowed her brows. "I should have brought you back home yesterday. If I had been by your side, you wouldn't have to face all of that alone."

Janet led Johanna to the sofa to sit down. She then smiled warmly and comforted, "The bodyguards protected me very well. I didn't have any problems at all."

Janet then stood up and twirled, showing Johanna that she was fine.

Johanna's eyes became teary when she saw how understanding her daughter was. Her hand trembled slightly as she held Janet's hand.

"I can't believe you didn't even tell me after such a bug incident happened yesterday," Johanna complained. "You're just like your father, always trying to shoulder everything on your own."

Hearing this, Janet sensed that there was something on Johanna's mind.

She asked worriedly, "What happened to Dad? Is something wrong?"

Johanna's face darkened and she hesitated to speak. Finally, she shook her head and replied, "Your father can deal with the problem alone. It has nothing to do with us. Don't ask anymore."

Janet withheld her questions when she sensed that Johanna was unwilling to speak.

Just then, a notification bell interrupted their

Chapter 1670 What Happened Yesterday  +120 Points at most conversation.

Johanna unlocked her phone and was stunned when she saw the message from her gynecologist.

 You have unlocked exclusive limited-time benefits>>

GO NOW