

Chapter 906 Former Subordinate

Upon hearing Aeneas, the security guards near the Kingland Group's gate all came. The vice-captain of the security team briskly approached, inquiring respectfully, "Mr. Hammond, who's causing trouble?"

Aeneas, disdain evident in his eyes, pointed directly at Liam, commanding, "It's him! Teach this arrogant guy a lesson and throw him out!"

Upon Aeneas' command, the vice-captain swiftly mobilized his team, surrounding Liam and Watkins.

Liam's gaze remained fixed on the faces of the security guards.

Despite the near-complete overhaul of the Kingland Group's security staff, Liam still recognized a few familiar faces among them.

Among the security guards, Vincenzo Deleon, the former captain of the Kingland Group's security team, stood alongside several colleagues.

He and some other colleagues, too, recognized Liam.

Surprise registered on their faces, swiftly replaced by a touch of respect. Concerned for Liam's well-being, Vincenzo inquired, "Mr. Hoffman... How have you been?"

"Are you doing okay now?"

Unlike Aeneas, Vincenzo and his colleagues didn't harbor disdain for Liam, having heard about the challenges he was facing.

In the past, Liam had stood up for the interests of ordinary employees, earning their profound respect.

Smiling in response to Vincenzo's greeting, Liam nodded. "Not bad. Vincenzo, it seems you're caught in a bit of a dilemma this time."

Liam's recollection of his name both flattered and surprised Vincenzo. Eager to reassure Liam, Vincenzo began, "Mr. Hoffman, don't worry. I won't..."

However, before he could complete his sentence, he was rudely interrupted by Aeneas.

Intent on humiliating Liam, Aeneas couldn't fathom Vincenzo engaging in conversation with his former boss.

So, Aeneas said coldly, "The one who made trouble is your former boss, Liam. Why waste time talking to him? Drive him out now!"

Reacting to Aeneas' directive, several new security guards prepared to take action.

Yet, Vincenzo intervened, halting them in their tracks. With a stern expression, he questioned Aeneas, "Mr. Hammond, what's happening here? Are you instructing us to oust Mr. Hoffman without cause? From what I recall, Mr. Hoffman isn't one to provoke trouble without reason!"

With those words, Vincenzo's stance became evident.

He had always respected Liam and harbored disdain for capricious individuals like Aeneas.

Aeneas scowled deeply, caught off guard by Vincenzo's defiance in front of so many people. He rebuked in a low, stern voice, "Do you comprehend the implications of your words? I am the director of the Kingland Group, and Mr. Benedict Hoffman shares no fondness for Liam! If you dare to side with him, prepare to be punished by Benedict!"

A tinge of fear crept into Vincenzo's expression, yet he refused to expel Liam on his own accord.

Without hesitation, Vincenzo retorted, "Aeneas, this is your personal matter. It doesn't concern our security team. Even if the group decides to take action, it's not your place to execute it."

Vincenzo led his security team members away with a dismissive wave, disregarding Aeneas.

In response, Liam sneered at Aeneas and remarked, "Are you planning to bow down to me voluntarily, or do you need assistance?"

The meaning behind Liam's words wasn't lost on Aeneas. His face turned crimson with anger, but he found himself powerless against Liam.

However, as Aeneas glimpsed the one million in cash on the ground, a sudden shift in perspective overcame him.

The allure of the substantial sum, equivalent to almost five years' worth of his salary, clouded his judgment.

Contemplating this, Aeneas licked his lips, seemingly willing to forsake his reputation for the sake of immediate gain.

His hand reached for the bag of money, but before he could grasp it, Liam swiftly seized his wrist.

With a sly smile, Liam stated, "What are you doing? I merely wanted to show you the money to prove that I do possess one million in cash. I never said I was giving it to you!"

Aeneas seethed with rage at Liam's taunting words, vigorously attempting to resist.

However, Carsen swiftly intervened, subduing Aeneas.

Liam sneered, "Carsen, strip him naked and make him kowtow!"

Eager to carry out Liam's command, Carsen leered, stripping Aeneas of his garments before pressing him down into a kowtow.

Flushed with anger, Aeneas fainted on the spot.

Slightly surprised by the quick collapse, Liam took a few steps forward and delivered a swift kick to wake him up.

With a cold stare, Liam demanded, "Who is Benedict? Tell me everything you know about him. Otherwise, I'll share the video of your humiliating display online for the world to see!"

As Aeneas regained consciousness, the color drained from his face upon hearing Liam's ultimatum.

He knew that the release of such a video would jeopardize the hard-earned position of director he had worked so diligently to attain.

Hurriedly, Aeneas began, "Benedict, he is Gallagher's son, the current chairman of Kingland Group..."

Liam's brow furrowed slightly at this revelation.

Benedict was the son of Gallagher, Liam's fifth uncle.

A surge of anger coursed through Liam as he connected the dots. His fifth uncle, Gallagher, had conspired with his eldest uncle, Demetrius, to undermine the authority of the Hoffman family.

Liam muttered angrily, "Gallagher, this time, I'll start with you!"