

Chapter 1706 Locke Avila

"I saw the trending news and discovered you were hospitalized. So I came here to visit you. But I didn't expect you to have a guest here," the man said with a polite smile. When he mentioned the presence of a guest, he smiled slightly at Janet.

Seeing this, Janet nodded at the man and smiled politely at him.

"I didn't ask you to come here, and I don't want to see you either." Mandy rolled her eyes, feeling helpless. It was easy to see that she did not want to talk to the man at all.

A trace of displeasure flashed across the man's face when he heard Mandy's words.

Janet inspected the man curiously. He had gold-rimmed eyes, and he exuded an air of elegance and charm.

However, it was also apparent that the man didn't want her in the ward.

As a matter of fact, the man was standing by the door of ward, obviously waiting for Janet to get the hint and leave of her own volition.

The three of them stood there awkwardly, waiting for one of them to make the first move.

Frowning, Janet looked away from the man and turned her attention to Mandy. She wanted

Janet inspected the man curiously. He had gold-rimmed eyes, and he exuded an air of elegance and charm.

However, it was also apparent that the man didn't want her in the ward.

As a matter of fact, the man was standing by the door of ward, obviously waiting for Janet to get the hint and leave of her own volition.

The three of them stood there awkwardly, waiting for one of them to make the first move.

Frowning, Janet looked away from the man and turned her attention to Mandy. She wanted Mandy to tell her who this man was.

Mandy understood what the look in Janet's eyes meant, but she didn't think that right now was the time to discuss it.

The play fight with Janet had left the collar of Mandy's hospital gown a little ruffled, so she quickly straightened it.

Then she cleared her throat and told Janet, "Janet, I'm a little tired and want to rest. When I'm discharged from the hospital in a few days, you can come to my house and we can hang out."

Janet nodded and said to Mandy, "Okay. Remember to take good care of yourself. Call me if you need anything."

Then Janet stood up and left.

As soon as Janet walked out of the ward, the door was shut firmly behind her. A second later, there was a click, indicating that the door had been locked from inside.

When Janet heard this, she came to an abrupt halt. Her brows furrowed and she became Janet inspected the man curiously. He had gold-rimmed eyes, and he exuded an air of elegance and charm.

However, it was also apparent that the man didn't want her in the ward.

As a matter of fact, the man was standing by the door of ward, obviously waiting for Janet to get the hint and leave of her own volition.

The three of them stood there awkwardly, waiting for one of them to make the first move.

Frowning, Janet looked away from the man and turned her attention to Mandy. She wanted Mandy to tell her who this man was.

Mandy understood what the look in Janet's eyes meant, but she didn't think that right now was the time to discuss it.

The play fight with Janet had left the collar of Mandy's hospital gown a little ruffled, so she quickly straightened it.

Then she cleared her throat and told Janet, "Janet, I'm a little tired and want to rest. When I'm discharged from the hospital in a few days, you can come to my house and we can hang out."

Janet nodded and said to Mandy, "Okay. Remember to take good care of yourself. Call me if you need anything."

Then Janet stood up and left.

As soon as Janet walked out of the ward, the door was shut firmly behind her. A second later, there was a click, indicating that the door had been locked from inside.

When Janet heard this, she came to an abrupt halt. Her brows furrowed and she became and she hadn't heard a raised voice or scuffle, so Mandy and Locke were probably not fighting or arguing.

"But I don't think Mandy wants to see that man," Janet murmured to herself.

However, regardless of any misgivings she might have about the situation, this was Mandy's private affair and she couldn't get involved. Moreover, Zola should be back soon.

Now that she was certain that nothing would happen to Mandy, Janet left the hospital.

 Limited-time offer: 30 minutes of free reading>>

Claim Now