

Chapter 1864 They Will Be Punished As They Deserve

"I know. Don't worry. We're just getting started. I'll make sure Rosetta and my mother get what they deserve," Locke said, his smile tinged with irony.

Brandon felt a chill when he heard Locke's icy tone.

Seeing Locke's grave expression, Brandon asked, "What are you going to do next?"

What revenge was Locke planning against Rosetta and his mother? A sense of foreboding washed over Brandon.

Locke gave a self-mocking grin and said, "What plan could I possibly have? Right now, all I can do is stay here and wait for Mandy to wake up."

Realizing Locke wasn't going to share more, Brandon dropped the subject.

After a few moments, Brandon approached Janet and put his arm around her shoulders. "Let's come back tomorrow. Staying out here all night won't change Mandy's condition."

Janet sighed, turned to Locke, and said, "Let me know immediately if there's any change in Mandy's condition. Also, call us if you need anything."

Locke nodded silently, choosing not to speak.

As they waited for the elevator in the corridor, Janet glanced back at Locke, who was seated at the far end of the hallway, and whispered to Brandon, "What do you think he'll do to make things right for Mandy? The person who hurt Mandy is Locke's mother, and Rosetta is deeply tied to the Avila family's interests. Can he really go against his own family for Mandy?"

Janet feared that Mandy would end up suffering without seeing justice served. She worried that Mandy would find herself alone in her pain while those who harmed her continued to live comfortably.

When the elevator doors slid open, they stepped inside. Brandon, raising an eyebrow, voiced Janet's concern. "Are you worried that Locke will side with the Avila family and his mother, and let Mandy suffer as a result?"

Janet just nodded. Yesterday, she had looked into the Nelson family backing Rosetta. They were indeed a renowned and influential family with over a century of history. No wonder Della, who was not fond of Mandy, was eager for Locke to marry Rosetta.

As they exited the elevator and got into their car, Brandon turned to Janet, looking at her intently for a few moments. Only when Janet blushed and pushed his head away did he say earnestly, "You're the most important person to me. Anyone who threatens you is my enemy."

Reassured by Brandon's firm declaration, Janet felt a pang of happiness mixed with concern. She sighed and said, "But Della is Locke's mother. No matter how much he loves Mandy, how can he possibly confront his own mother?"

Brandon shrugged and said, "I don't know. It's not a problem for me."

Janet sighed helplessly. "Looks like I need to spend more time with Mandy and be there for her."

Brandon looked a bit down and said, "You just got back to the studio. You're already swamped with work, and now you have to make time for daily hospital visits. That means we'll hardly see each other."

Janet gave a playful smile and said, "Why bring that up now?"

Frowning, Brandon complained, "You just got your memory back. We should be spending more time together to adjust and really work on our relationship. But the moment you remembered, you rushed back to work, and now you're off to the hospital every day. It's like you've forgotten about me. I wish I had never helped you regain your memory."

Janet was at a loss for words. She finally conceded. "Alright. I'll do my best to make more time for us, okay?"

As they spoke, they arrived at the entrance of Janet's studio. At Janet's insistence, Brandon didn't accompany her inside. He simply watched her go in, then drove off.

When Janet entered the studio, Lexi approached her with a bright smile and said excitedly, "Janet! Last night, someone made an order on our studio's platform for a high-end suit. But he wants to discuss the details with you personally."
