The car idled by the studio entrance. Janet insisted that there was no need for Brandon to step out.

Lexi greeted her with a freshly brewed cup of coffee as soon as Janet stepped inside.

Lexi was carrying the tray of coffee when she noticed Janet booting up her computer. Not one to miss a morsel of juicy gossip, she asked, "Can you believe what happened to Mandy? She always seemed so tough, but it turns out even she got manipulated somehow. It's heartbreaking—she ended up losing her child and landing in the ICU."

"How did you find out about Mandy?" Janet's eyebrows shot up in surprise. She hadn't mentioned Mandy's accident to Lexi.

Lexi slid her phone across the table. "Check it out. The whole internet's buzzing about it. The top search on all social media platforms right now is all about Mandy's miscarriage. Went viral in, like, minutes."

Janet snatched the phone and scrolled through her social feeds. The top searches were flooded with news of Mandy's miscarriage and accusations against Rosetta as the culprit. It seemed like the whole world was chiming in on the drama. The public even went as far as digging into Rosetta's identity and past.

Clicking on a popular post, Janet braced herself for the onslaught of cyberbullying. Sure enough, the comments section was a cesspool of hate directed at Rosetta.

Janet felt that cyberbullying was a terrible thing to do, but she couldn't help but feel a pang of satisfaction. Rosetta, the high-flying socialite, was getting the punishment she deserve.

But then a nagging doubt crept in. The Nelson family was backing Rosetta. Surely, she wouldn't go down without a fight. Janet realized this was far from over.

Janet handed the phone back to Lexi and asked her to leave. Then, she turned her attention back to her computer and dove straight into the trending topics on the hot search list.

Meanwhile, over at the Avila family villa, Rosetta returned from the hospital to find her family gathered in the living room, all wearing somber expressions.

Rosetta's heart raced as she approached her family. "What's going on?" she asked cautiously, her voice barely above a whisper.

Her parents' cold stares sent shivers down her spine, and Della's deliberate silence felt like a punch to the gut. Even Sanford, usually distant, seemed to purposefully ignore her.

Panic bubbled up inside Rosetta as she turned to Sylvie, her sister. She always harbored a good relationship with Sylvie.

Sylvie's eye roll and swift action of pulling up her phone confirmed Rosetta's worst fears.

With trembling hands, Rosetta scrolled through the damning headlines, her breath catching in her throat. She was being painted as a villain, her reputation tarnished beyond repair. The thought of never being accepted in high society or finding a suitable match crushed her.

Tears spilled down her cheeks as she turned to her parents, her voice cracking with emotion. "Mom, Dad, you have to believe me. None of this is true! I'm innocent. Mrs. Avila and I came to Barnes for a vacation and stopped by to see Locke. I had no idea we would run into Mandy in his office. She was the one who attacked me. I was so terrified I pushed her. It was an accident. I never meant for any of this to happen. I didn't know she would lose her baby. It wasn't my intention. What do I do now?"

Rosetta's tears flowed freely. With every sob, she hoped to stir some empathy from her family. Despite their disappointment and frustration, the Nelson family understood the importance of preserving their reputation. They couldn't afford to let Rosetta's name be tarnished, even if it meant turning a blind eye to the truth.

Alyssa Nelson, Rosetta's mother, slammed her cup onto the table. Her eyes flashed with anger as she directed her gaze at Della. "You were the one pushing for Rosetta to be with Locke from the start.

And now look where we are. Rosetta's actions have brought shame on our family and jeopardized everything we've worked for. What's your plan to fix this mess, Della?"

Della's demeanor shifted at Alyssa's sharp words. She forced a smile to mask her unease and met Alyssa's gaze head-on. "I did encourage Rosetta to visit Locke, but it was with the best intentions. I know she would never intentionally harm anyone. This whole scandal reeks of Mandy's manipulation. She's desperate to sabotage the alliance between our families, and she's stooped to new lows to achieve it."

Alyssa's steely expression softened slightly when she saw how hostile Della was towards Mandy.
