

Chapter 1905 Brandon's Apology

Elizabeth proudly displayed the gifts she had brought for Janet, one by one. Although the gifts were not costly, they were exactly what Janet needed, filling her with a sense of warmth.

The presents included the newest fashion magazine, books on designing for children, and some clothes suitable for kids. Naturally, their conversation steered towards children's clothing designs.

Elizabeth was enthusiastic and proposed making a few outfits for Janet's baby. As Janet touched the soft fabric on the table, her smile grew even brighter.

Brandon walked in at that moment, his arms full of flowers and several luxury shopping bags in his hands. He noticed Janet and Elizabeth laughing together, and his sudden entrance seemed to disrupt the pleasant atmosphere in the living room.

Upon seeing Brandon, Elizabeth decided to leave, visibly upset with him.

Before departing, she made sure to say, "I'm heading out now. I have to work tomorrow. Take care of yourself. I'll visit again when I get a chance. Call me if you need anything."

Before departing, she made sure to say, "I'm heading out now. I have to work tomorrow. Take care of yourself. I'll visit again when I get a chance. Call me if you need anything."

Elizabeth looked at Brandon with a meaningful expression as she talked.

Janet, smiling, escorted Elizabeth to the door. After watching Elizabeth depart, Janet turned to Brandon with a cool demeanor and asked, "Why are you here?"

Brandon, still holding the gifts, stepped further inside. His expression turned somber upon seeing the gifts Elizabeth had brought and hearing Janet's chilly voice.

He set down the gifts and reached out to Janet. Relieved she didn't pull away, he apologized, "I'm sorry. I was wrong. I truly realize my mistake..."

Janet remained silent.

Brandon took a deep breath and said patiently, "When you were hospitalized, your health was poor.

The hospital experts believed you were too weak to sustain the pregnancy. I feared that even if you kept the baby for now, you might still lose it later, which would be even harder for you to bear. I want the baby, but your well-being is my top priority. I had to choose to protect you. I'm sorry for not considering your feelings."

Noticing the genuine regret in his eyes, Janet felt a stir of emotion.

However, when she considered the baby growing inside her, she still felt a bit frightened. She expressed her vulnerability, saying, "I can understand your decision logically. I realize you made it to shield me, fearing I might suffer even more."

Seeing a glimmer of hope in Brandon's eyes, Janet continued, "But as a soon-to-be mother, I cannot accept your decision to end the pregnancy. Unless my health severely threatens my ability to carry the baby, I should not opt for an abortion, nor should you make that choice for me."

Brandon bowed his head and admitted his mistake remorsefully. "I was wrong. I focused only on your health and failed to put myself in your position. I'm truly sorry. I recognize my mistake this time."

Janet pulled her hand away and said, "It's late. You should go home. I'm okay. I plan to stay with my parents for a while. Please don't visit me these days. The doctor advised that I need good rest."

Janet knew Brandon made his decision to protect her as much as possible. She watched him express his guilt and apologize continuously, yet it did not bring her joy.
