

Chapter 1966 Preparing For Paternity Test

Norma was stunned. "Wait a minute! Paternity tests between grandparents and grandchildren aren't as accurate. We should wait for Tyler's release."

Janet arched an eyebrow. "We don't know when that'll be. Besides, we have resources. We'll ask the police to collect a DNA sample from Tyler to confirm paternity. Surely, they'd be willing to help reunite a father with his son."

Norma's face fell. She sputtered a response, but Janet cut her off. "That's settled. Any further arguments, and I'll question if the child is even Tyler's."

Janet instructed a servant to escort Norma back to her room.

Upstairs, Janet found Brandon engrossed in documents. A smile played on his lips when he saw her. He knew she'd handled the situation.

He pulled her into a hug. "You've gotten so much stronger, Janet. Solved that problem in a flash! Seems I won't be needed as much anymore. I wonder if you'll abandon your useless husband in the future."

Janet chuckled. "Don't be silly. I couldn't have done it without your support. But first, we need confirmation if this child is truly Hannah's grandson."

"And if he's Tyler's?" Brandon asked. "Will you help raise him?"

He was already wary of Norma's character. She was lazy and greedy.

Janet shook her head. "Do I seem stupid? Raising Norma and her child? Absolutely not. She can handle it herself."

After a thoughtful pause, she continued, "However, I still need your help getting a DNA sample from Tyler. I'm not familiar with the authorities involved."

Brandon's eyes lit up at her request. "Let me do the math. Building connections, dinners, gifts...it adds up. You control my finances, remember? This request is going to require a much bigger budget."

Despite being CEO of Larson Group, Brandon's personal funds were managed by Janet after their marriage. In reality, he didn't have much independent access to cash.

Seeing Brandon's serious face, Janet sighed. "Everything seems so expensive lately. The baby's coming in a few months, which will add another layer of financial stress. My art studio is still new, and I'm worried about how it will do."

She felt a renewed urgency to work hard.

Reaching into her drawer, Janet pulled out her wallet and counted out some bills for Brandon. "Be careful with your spending."

Brandon took the money with mock seriousness and pulled her into a hug.

The warm light cast a rosy glow on Janet's cheeks. Brandon couldn't resist leaning down and kissing her.

The tenderness of the kiss ignited a spark within him, leaving him restless.

Sensing the shift in Brandon's mood, Janet gently pushed him away. "We did it just a few days ago. Try to control yourself. If you stress the baby, I won't be happy!"

Brandon offered a wry smile and touched her stomach. "Alright, alright, you win. I'll hold back."

Internally, he grumbled about the unborn baby already taking his place in the family.

In her room, Norma was unable to sleep. She tossed and turned all night until dawn.
